Václav Havel, former president of the Czech Republic and a political prisoner for years, was asked in an interview: "Do you see a grain of hope anywhere?" He replied:

"O should probable say first that the kind of hope I often think about (especially in situations that are particularly hopeless, such as prison) I understand above all else as a state of mind, not a state of the world. Either we have hope within us, or we don't; it's a dimension of the soul, and it's not essentially dependent on some particular observation of the world or estimate of the situation.

Hope is not prognostication. It is an orientation of the spirit, an orientation of the heart; it transcends the world that is immediately experienced, and is anchored somewhere beyond its horizons.

I think the deepest and most important form of hope, the only one that can keep us above the water, and the only true source of the breath-taking dimension of the human spirit and its effects, is something we get, as it were, from 'elsewhere'."
