The themes of death, judgement, heaven and hell dealt with “in the New Testament are not marginal topics, worthy of attention only by those drawn by the bizarre or the esoteric. They are substantial themes that lie close to the heart of Christian hope. They critique the individualism that has often distorted the contemporary church’s understanding of the gospel.

They insist that the Christian hope is rooted ultimately in God’s action, and that it is about more than just how I might make it to heaven.
